New Census Is Most Complete Ever Taken and Presents Some Interesting Figures.

WASHINGTON, August 3.—That the census of the fishing industries of the United States, which practically has been completed by the Census Bureau, been completed by the Census Bureau, bids fair to be the most accurate and comprehensive ever computed in the history of American fisheries, is de-clared in a statement issued to-day. The Bureau of Fisheries has co-operated with the Census Bureau by sending some of its experts to the lat-ter bureau under the chief statistical ter bureau under the chief statistician of the division of manufactures. As a result, it is said, the bureau has taken the most complete census of the fish-ing industries in the United States eyes, made. made.

Last Was a Failure.

The last census of fisheries, according to the statement, was taken in 1890, and is said to have been a failure, in part due to the short period of ime allowed for its compilation, Since that time the Bureau of Fisheries, has that time the Bureau or Fisheries, has, at intervals, collected statistics of this industry, but there are none for the whole country for a given period.

Figures so far published indicate a marked development in the fishing enterprises in almost every section of the country, although some species show a decrease. decrease. During 1988, there were employed on the Gulf of Mexico, inclusive of the States of Mississippi, Florida and Texas, 16,748 fishermen, and the total States catch for that period was valued at $4,859,560.
